Remember the Titans Evaluation

The movie Remember the Titans was created in the year of 2000. The genre is Sport and drama and is based on a true story. The star of this movie is Denzel Washington as Coach Herman. This movie is based on an African American Football coach, coaching a racially segregated football team in the year of 1971. Watching this film gives you the reality of how it was for African Americans and White Americans playing together on the same football team during a prevalent time of racism. I would highly recommend people to watch this movie for various reasons that I will explain.

Watching this movie I feel like the director touched on every component for creating a good movie. The plot was great I was able to understand what the movie was about after watching it. My emotional side was touched multiple times during the watching, I went through sadness, anger, and happiness. The acting was good. There were times when I actually forgot that the people in the movie were actually actors. It felt like actors were the actual people that they were acting as. Even the lesser actors played their role beautifully. They played the role of high schoolers in the 70s very well in my opinion. And as a former football player there were multiple scenes in the movie that actually happens in real life football games and in the football locker rooms. The theme and the tone of the movie was on point as well. It was it brought awareness to the problem of racism but also showed solutions. The direction of the Movie was very well put together, each scene correlated with each other, the pacing of the movie was well balanced, it was not too long or too short. The story telling was pretty much straight forward and was easy to understand what type of movie I was getting into from the beginning. There was a good amount of suspense or tension that was felt throughout the movie, because of the sensitivity of the topic of the movie. The Pace of the movie was balanced, I did not feel like any scenes were dragged out, each scene was well organized. The score was on point; the music that was being played matched each scene the old school funk music supported the time and year of which the movie takes place in, and especially during the football Games and behind the conversations. The production design was good also The location of the movie was mostly on a highschool campus, urban area and in a rural area. where football games and football camp is usually played.

There are definitely multiple lessons throughout the movie that the viewer can take away from the movie. For example team development. Denzel was faced with the challenge of coaching a biracial football team in the 70s when racism was still very prevalent and present. Also the importance of change and how that can lead to success. There are obviously more lessons that can be learned throughout the movie but those are a few. The movie can definitely appeal to a larger audience. But also highlights achievements toward a certain audience. For an African American football coach to join a predominately white football team in the 1970s and is told to lead it, bringing with him other african american players,shows the grit,tenacity, and want within the coach to reach His goal.which highlights Him a person and as a race. Again I will definitely recommend people to watch this film, it is very entertaining,encouraging and emotionally stimulating.
