Journal: 1

This week in clinical, it was my first day working in the pediatric hospital. My professor gave us a tour of the unit. I was able to see different hospital beds setting with rails for the safety of the kids. I learned that it is important to put the rail of the bed up to prevent fall. I was not able to work with a patient, but I was watching in the window one of my classmates feeding an 8-month boy.

In the group activity, we learned about vital signs for each age group. My group had to present vital signs for newborn up to six months. I remember recall few of the steps that I learned in class but I need to improve in that area. I need to memorize normal and abnormal vital signs for children. I did not perform technical skills since I did not have a patient, but I know how to perform it.

My greatest challenge was putting the rail of the bed up. It was hard for me to squeeze the button, my professor had to show me how to get it done. I unable to build my communication skills with clients or family members, but I was able to work in group with my classmates. We had to do a small presentation about milestone of children. My greatest accomplishment for this week, was to be able to observed and work in the Pediatric unit. I have always wanted to be a pediatric nurse; this experience will aid me to choose my specialty. My growth for this week, was learning about vital signs and also discussing about growth development.

Give thanks to the LORD, for he is good; his love endures forever." — Psalm 107:1

I chose this verse because God is allowing me to experience something I have always wanted to do since I was younger. I want to give him praise for his Goodness and his mercy.
