

Rachel Negrón

I don't think that the Incan Empire could have warded off the Spanish invasion because the Spanish already arrived in Peru by that time. The Incan Empire was very good with developing networks. I believe that they could have still done this even if they waited a year. The Incans struggled with their military strength they could not have defended against European invaders. The Incans also struggled with maintaining friendships with "neighboring groups" maybe if they maintained better networks they could have been stronger. If the Incan Empire started to develop progressively they could have more potential to defeat the Spanish.