Capstone 2: March Journal

Week 1 (1-4): As we enter the second month of this semester, we are starting to see a massive improvement in what we are working on. The application is getting its foundations and the class is finally going to see my design. I was confident, nervous, and excited for this to happen since I have been working on these designs for most of February. On Friday (Feb 3), I showed my designs; they liked them (well, two of them, at least). I was so relieved that they liked them. While they didn't decide which they want to use, I am pretty sure that they are using design option 1. It was also a short week, but it was quite eventful and the confidence boost I need for the rest of the month.

Week 2 (5-11): This week was an exciting one since I had to leave New York for Florida for a family event. I stayed there for two weeks and had a great time. This week wasn't eventful for the Capstone project since we didn't have a class that week and Santi, a tester, didn't have anything to do at the moment. An uneventful week for the Capstone Project, but not for me.

Week 3 (12-18): Ah, Spring Break. An amazing time to relax before we realized that we are halfway through March. I was still in Florida and did my homework beforehand so I could have the next week empty for me since I would still be in Florida. Since it was spring break, nothing happened for the project on my part. Still, I was having so much fun in Florida with my family. Again, An uneventful week for the Capstone Project, but not for me.

Week 4 (19-25): This is the week I came back to New York it was cold and rainy, and my throat was sore. While I had a lot of fun in Florida, it is good to be home in the beauty of NYC. This is the week when the testers finally tested something. I was a bit nervous, but those were my marching orders and I had to accomplish them. We also saw my design concept being used for AU Connect Developer Build. It was a good week, but April is near, which means Easter is close by. I have a lot of work ahead of me for Easter since I serve at my church. A great week for progress for the Capstone, but a heavy workload for me next week.

Week 5 (26-31): This week, I had a lot to do. I have to edit some videos, make a lot of graphics for my church, and I also have to test the application for the first time. It was interesting testing something for the first time. I am also excited about the next application version I have to test. A short eventful week for me and the Capstone project. I can't wait to see what April has in store for me.

I have a great time this month because of my trip. I am very excited about April for Easter and other special events. Thank you for your time.
