

Jazmine Howard

HIS 113

Inca Empire

Inca Empire Was a Kingdom that developed in the Andes region of South America and gradually grew larger over a century. “Inca Empire was divided into four provinces The Northwest, Northeast, Southwest, and Southeast. Each province was under its own provincial governor(Morillo pg349).” “Inca Empire Was an isolated world(Morillo pg34).” They never developed A writing system, which handicapped communications throughout the provinces.Inca Population compared to other empires were small, totaling 8 million versus 22 million in Central America. I believe due to low advanced communication, and low population. Inca Empire Not have expanded, but become more stabilized. The food food was farmed courage the growth of networks. “Few if any discernible network connections center on political and social complexity in Mesoamerica(Morillo pg 349).” The hierarchies, on The top was royal families, warriors and military officials and religious officials. The rest of the pyramid was labor workers, at the bottom. The factor of society that would need to strengthen to secure a stronger empire was in need for weapons, made of metal versus wooden stone. A uniform language for communication as well as increased population number for battles. In my alternative history, trade will be more prominent, battles would be more frequent to increase population. Population growth will increase as well as an organized language to communicate between the provinces without speaking. More domesticated animals for eating and trading. If the Spanish never overthrew Inca, Will be more developed, but you are still isolated.