I believe that human life is important and hold so much weight to it. We have to realize that God put us on this Earth for a purpose. We hold so much significance to the One who created us in His image. The society that we live in now might tell us that we don't matter just because of the placement where our planet is, but God wouldn't have made it like that if He knew what He was doing. If we look back in Genesis, God created everything and then He made man. God had given Adam the task to care for everything that God had made. Not only does it matter where He placed the stars, the moon, the animals, etc. But knew that He needed someone who would watch over the things He created. Where our planet is placed is the least of our worries, but we have a God who looks after us.

When you view nature as a sister you can see it as an equal. You have a different bond with a sibling than you do with a mother. There's protection that you give to a sister regardless if they're younger or older. Now when you see it as a mother you can believe that it has authority over you. You allow "mother" nature to control you. We have to remember that God is the one who created the heavens and the earth. He is the only one who has authority over us, not the things He has created. God made man so that we could have control over it not the other way around. I believe that when we say mother nature, we tend to say it out of habit and don't really give it much thought. We should recognize our ignorance and acknowledge that God is the Creator.

The way the world came to be in my opinion is through God, how He made the earth become a blank slate to it being filled with everything that we have today. It can be seen that in Genesis how the world was formed and how it came to be. In Genesis we read the earth was empty and was just filled with water. We can see the various lights being mentioned that we have now. Those lights are the same the help us distinguish between from night and day to weeks seasons and years. The way that I've been able to evaluate this evidence is what does the beginning of Genesis have to tell me. I think what allows me to understand is reading Scripture and looking at the reality that I live and figuring out how it correlates. From everything that was written years ago is true to this day and has not been false. It also shows me the many ways that God enjoyed his creation, because everything that was in it was good.

When looking back at the dialogue Hamlet it portrays the evilness that humanity has. Because humanity is superior in some ways it believes that it has authority over certain things. This allows for pride to be swelled up and humility to become inferior. I believe that this can take the mind to a dark place and act upon certain things that human wouldn't usually do. That's why the mind that humanity was given takes it a step further into mind of evilness because it shows that humanity is capable of doing it. Other than the dialogue we should that it is an innate evilness that we have within ourselves. Unfortunately, we are born evil, and this is a pity that we live with.

The factors that can influence behavior are outside influences or even worldviews. I think these can factors are determinative because these factors do shape a person on how they become. They are sure things in everyone's life that no one can get away from. I believe that there is a limit and at the same time there isn't when it comes to regulating one's behavior. I think that the outside influences or how you're shaped can limit you and impede the way you might want to grow. On the other hand, we have this one thing that God gave us which was free will. We have the ability to stray way from things that might harm us or get closer to things that might benefit us. It's important to recognize that we do have the freedom to make our own choices in life. We are the ones in our lives to determine what comes in goes.

The implications that this statement shows limitation that since we don't have God, we're not capable of life. A man who doesn't have God in his life is bound to fail because he is lost. The mind will wander and render the person helpless in life leading them to destruction instead of life. Now, looking at it in the perspective of physical we can do things without God. We do have a sense of direction and what we do with our lives. Once again, the limitation becomes when we as humans don't capture the greatness of God and not understanding His guidance in our lives. I liked the statement that he made about how lives are revolved around our Creator. We know that God is the one who leads us, so when we separate ourselves from Him, we lead ourselves a dangerous path. When we allow the world to dictate who we say we are, it strips us from the identity we were given.
