So the Incan World which is the Incan Empire was a huge Empire of natives that lived in central and south America. They crossed the land bridge that was in Alaska and Russia, and kept moving further down. Now if the Incan Empire got big enough would they have beaten the Spanish empire? That is a big if question, because the Spanish had the technology with gunpowder and maybe more knowledge. The Incan Empire would have had a great fight vs the Spanish, especially if the Incan Empire expanded their people. The Incan Empire would definitely have the numbers but with the technology of the Spanish I'm not too sure if the Incans would win even with the numbers, the Spanish in close quarter combat do have swords which is a huge advantage for them, but the Incans with big numbers would give them a slight edge, they could definitely push the Spaniards back. If the Incans had a very successful network they could definitely have a shot at pushing back the Spaniards and possibly defeating them.
