

Paul Aguirre

World Civilization II

Professor O'Hara

4/13/2023

Mexico City

Vallecillos Lucas, National Geographic,

<https://www.nationalgeographic.com/travel/destination/mexico-city>, April 13 2023.

Tokyo

TOKYO, JAPAN - AUGUST 1, 2015: Crowds pass below colorful signs in Akihabara. The historic electronics district has evolved into a shopping area for video games, anime, manga, and computer goods. Shutterstock, https://www.shutterstock.com/image-photo/tokyo-japan-august-1-2015-crowds-302738093?irclid=2s8ws3VJZxyNT%3Ao1NF1DGQ-cUkAT7SX3NzrZxQ0&irgwc=1&src=2Kj0amH1xBzatJe2n_chJw-1-3&utm_campaign=Skimbit%20Ltd.&utm_content=42119&utm_medium=Affiliate&utm_source=10078&utm_term=businessinsider.com, April 13, 2023.

London

Getty Images/iStockphoto, <https://images.app.goo.gl/tvGfgxEa9gNL1Ed7>, April 13, 2023

New York

Steinmetz George, National Geographic.

<https://www.nationalgeographic.com/travel/destination/new-york-city>. April 23, 2023

There are many similarities between these cities. For example, all of these cities are the biggest cities of their respective countries, all of them have a deep history, all of these cities are some of the most culturally diverse of their respective countries and all of these cities work long hours as well. In addition, all are influential cities that contribute lots to the economy of their respective countries and also all are large representatives of their respective countries (which brings lots of tourists). All of these cities have smaller sections to them. In New York City and Mexico City, the sections in the cities are very different from each other. One place does not look like the next. However in London and Tokyo, there are more similarities between sections however they still retain many differences as well (just not as drastic as New York City and Mexico City). Tokyo usually has the most modern looking areas in comparison to the other cities, while Mexico city is the least modern looking (though it is still relatively modern). London has some areas that have remained somewhat unchanged which makes it look a little outdated. New York City has neighborhoods, districts or overall sections which either look very modern, very old, or occasionally somewhere in between. Mexico city also has a similar federal district to NYC. Finally, all are relatively close to mountain areas though London is mostly the least near to them. These cities mostly differ in the ways that they express their culture(s) and also the way they are structured (which can also be secondarily determined by culture). New York City is a place where one neighborhood to another may look like two different countries, however London manages to stay relatively similar for large stretches of area. Tokyo is structured based on train stops and therefore the segments of the city are largely determined by the transportation. These cities share many similarities, more than they share differences.

Works Cited

Ehrlich, Blakez, et al. "London - Character of the City." Encyclopedia Britannica, 13 Apr. 2023, britannica.com/place/London/Character-of-the-city.

Lankevich, George. "New York City | Layout, Map, Economy, Culture, Facts, & History." Encyclopedia Britannica, 13 Apr. 2023, britannica.com/place/New-York-City.

Mautner, Carlos Rincon. "Mexico City - Landscape." Encyclopedia Britannica, 6 Apr. 2023, britannica.com/place/Mexico-City/Landscape.

"Tokyo | Japan, Population, Map, History, & Facts." Encyclopedia Britannica, 12 Apr. 2023, britannica.com/place/Tokyo.