Final Paper Proposal

If people have never heard of Christ and the salvation offered through his work, what is the state of their afterlife? Do they go to heaven or hell? Why or why not?

Christianity is one of the oldest religions in history, and one of the most widely followed. It also has many traditions that are still carried out today and are very important for all followers of Christianity.

One of the most controversial topics is salvation and if non-believers should have salvation, we can also find many parts of the bible in which it is made clear that salvation could not be achieved without the help of Christ, but we can find other parts and opinions that make it clear that salvation could not be achieved without the help of Christ, but we can also find other parts and opinions that make it clear that salvation could not be achieved without the help of Christ.

The fate of those who have never heard of Christ and the salvation provided through his work is a topic of theological contention within Christianity. While some contend that belief in Jesus Christ as the only means of salvation is necessary for entrance into heaven, others maintain that salvation can be attained through conscience and knowledge of God.
