The technique I have been using is reading information that pertains to the topic and taking notes and getting ideas on what I would need to make a point or tell what the meaning is about in my paragraphs used I have also read other articles that relate to the topic and making sure the information is up to date and current enough for use I have been overwhelmed with this because it is a final formal paper and I have been re-reading it to make sure I get the right information so that I use what is useful I have learned a lot but feel I need more to learn along the way to feel comfortable about my approach on writing a paper I am trying to grasp this concept that either way all that I have learned has been a positive one for me I am also learning about different authors and their titles in writing research along with work cited information and how to set up what is to be written I like the research part and find it interesting in what I read about on guidelines and how to set up a document I think the Purdue site has been very resourceful in style and set up I want to develop a decent argument and viewpoint that will engage the reader with my paper this is a challenge that I am hoping to accomplish with the research I have done and that it will be of interest to the reader and that it will show that my topic will open the eyes of the reader that bullying is a matter that should not be over looked no matter your age or whether your male or female it is undeserving.
