This paper was very interesting to write. There were many areas where I would do things a bit differently but overall had fun with it. I learned a lot about bullying in the U.S and all that it entailed. I used some tools from my "Reading for Writers" book that assisted me in writing. I used the technique that involved pacing my argument. I would cite what page I got that from, but I only have 15 minutes and want to make sure I write what other techniques assisted me with my paper. I tried to avoid writing about things that were not true in my paper making sure that everything was correct, and sound supported by facts. I did like the method of asking myself a question and finding the answer. I also incorporated a few questions in my paper and then explained the answer. I enjoy writing a lot and have found a new passion in writing. I really enjoyed the topic and found the psychological aspects heartbreaking but fascinating. A lot of what I wrote about was inspired by my major which is psychology. I wish to help students in high school and middle school with there issues. Especially with the issues of today including cyberbullying. Most of the children in America experience bullying in some way or form.
