Chapter 8

- 1) I agree that they are more alike than they think with how they approach the interface of psychology and theology. I believe they are more alike than they think because they both follow the same rules and guidelines when it comes to psychology and theology. I do believe they would be interested in genuine conversation because they would be interested in how one another would think or approach things.
- 2) Spies are different than Colonialists because spies reject the orthodox theological perspective, they lack deep commitment to any religious system and have very little investment in religion doctrine. Colonialists primary allegiance to a religious system that accepts the importance of Christian doctrine. They are basically the complete opposite.
- 3) Rebuilders are different because they recover from psychological views from Christian scripture and tradition. They aim towards building a unique christian psychology perspective. Colonialists Primary allegiance to a religious system that accepts the importance of Christian doctrine. They appropriate the findings of psychological methods that can illustrate or buttress the claims.

(a) Chapter 9

- 4) In my education or personal life I do not believe I have encountered the different versions of the enemies models. I do believe that I have seen Christian combatants in the church that I used to go to.
- 5) In my opinion I do not have too much worry about the secular assumptions of psychology because there are a lot of mental health concerns that are not entirely based in the spiritual world. My only concern is the secular world dismissing the fact that some things can be healed by involving God or teaching clients the power of prayer and admitting to sins and guilt. In today's society I can say that my only concern of the biblical counseling movement is that sometimes the churches do not understand the psychology of mental health they dismiss it or sometimes just tell people they are not praying enough which doesn't help a person.
