I believe that if I was to grow up in the state where we must learn English, Spanish and French I am pretty sure that learning multiple languages for a child would be a breeze. Therefore, there should not be any difficulties. A child can learn up to four languages as early before 6 or 7 years of age. However, it will depend on the board of education of the particular district, then, policies, and finally curriculum. Furthermore, learning multiple languages is a good attribute because it would mean that eventually can be used to the advantage in terms of getting a better paying job as it is not a requirement but very important. My view in global politics in North America I believe is not indifferent. As far as I am aware of, the United States government is based on a representative democracy and, that it should be the citizens to choose and elect who and what becomes the laws. Moreover, there are always conflicts in any state or country--there will be an individual, a group leader, and or a "dictator" that wouldn't want independence, self-determination, and or people placing importance in creating his or her own identity and destiny through the following: their choices, artistry, profession, and or efforts. Does it challenge any of my frame value? In some instances, I gather it would be challenging. I believe that adopting a tri-lingual nation would not be difficult, do we live a challenging life in the United States? Absolutely! Would there be changes if there weren't any challenges? No. We would be the same complacent, boring state. We may have Freedom. Individualism, Patriotism, Progress the "American Dream" freedom of speech and so on, but there are challenges behind it however, I believe we wouldn't be this strong state. It may sound a little naive but, that is the way I look at it and understand it.
