

Every country has their own history, borders, and other frame values. For instance, the north America, France, and Spain all these three countries are different in policy. Different counties also have their own kind of hierarchy in making external and internal policies. Economy and trades are also important, agriculture is another factor that could have different policy in different countries. For instance, trade (import and export) has different policy in Europe in the united state. In the food-exporting the United States are protected from outside competition both by tariffs and by direct subside and the EU has common agricultural policy. In the meantime, EU and the US has shred policy of keeping peace and fighting against terrorism.

If all north America run by one state that be a tri lingual state, a person must learn three languages, English, Spanish, and French as they grow. If I was residing in the mixture of these countries some of the things would be the same but most of them would be much different than now. The things that would be the same is the shared values about peace and stability that EU and US have about providing democracy, peace, freedom, and the rule of law. Their commitment about protecting human rights, economy development. Because even now US and EU are together can achieve these goals in their countries. But different would be that all three would be in one state and there would be no border between them. Now that they could trade differently at that time there would be no separate trading policy among them. Some of the internal laws would be different and there would be changes in political hierarchies.

In the north America there would be different ethnics and different languages and I think there would be not too much different conflicts between different ethnics because currently also there are different ethnic in the united state with minor difficulties or fully acceptance. But if France and Spain were a part of the North America some norms and roles would be different but still there would be counted different ethnics. I would be less sympathetic to separatists because if there are shared value and the state keep the frame value, language, and the culture of all different ethnic then why should be separate. Most of the time terrorism would use the situation and will develop among the people and groups who are separatists. And in my opinion, such a state would strike me as a good thing. Why? Because my frame values, culture, and language are saved and there is no conflict so I think it would be a great state.

I think my country has also experienced separation (I hope I'm not wrong). The time that my country was a part of the Soviet Union there was different ideas and opinions about the situation. Some people were good with the situation, most people were happy with their lives. But those who were against the government were not happy that is why they started war against the Soviet and the internal government... the result was that some of terroristic groups start developing and till now the country is a victim of those terrorists. But, public still are regretting about what happen and how they had everything with soviet and how they lost everything after the separation.
