Research and writing Assignment Chap 27

If I grew up in a state that adopted tri-lingualism, where everyone had to English, Spanish and French languages, my view of global politics would be that one could still have their individual identities yet be able to better relate to others who identify themselves differently and there would be less conflict in the world. I believe that everyone learning the same languages may help us to better communicate as there would be no foreign languages. This could possibly bring more unity amongst people of all cultures, backgrounds, and ethnicities. If this were the case in modern society, freedoms might be less threatened, all people would be considered equal yet still identify with their culture or race.

As far as sympathy toward the separatist movement, I would be more sympathetic because even though we are all required to learn the same language, a person should be able to identify with the ethnicity of who they are, and not be put into the same category with everyone else.

My frame values would not be challenged as America is a land of the free. We should be able to live as who we are despite learning the same languages. We are all different yet we are all equal in Gods eyes.
