I believe this film is remarkable because it reflects many issues in society. The school authorities divide students into two groups, good and bad. Our society does the same thing. Not just good and bad but skin colors and ethnicity. However, what is the definition of a problem child? What is the root of this issue? Probably nobody ever thinks of it. After watching this movie, I tried to figure out the connection between writing and the drastic change in students' mentality and behavior. We can draw or write anything we want on a blank piece of paper. The content can be either heartwarming, inspirational, or depressing, maybe evil. Problem students are not born this way, and living in this environment is painful. Mrs. Erin successfully replaced the old writings with kindness, patience, and self-sacrifice. She devoted her everything to making this world a better place.
