I chose the film Doubt I looked up the trailer for each movie choice and landed on Doubt because of the suspense. Doubt was very interesting and full of impeccable acting. I chose this film for 3 reasons. The first being Meryl Streep, the second being Viola Davis and finally the story line. The story kept me hooked the entire time. I tried to analyze whether or not it was the hate of Meryl Streep's character that somehow twisted itself wanting the character Father Flynn to have assaulted a child. Because Streep's character did not care for Father Flynn it was hard to know/ see the truth. Both sides were so convincing, and both had me fooled to the very end of the film. It moved me, Meryl Streep's character was so strong and confident in the beginning, towards the end she was so raw and human. Her heart was doubtful, and faith shaken hence the title of the movie. I felt doubtful the entire film of who was guilty and who was innocent. The repetitive question "did he do it?", lingered in my head. I could not tell you with certainty that Father Flynn in fact violated a child. However, I am sure the majority would say he did, I am not so sure. The hate of Streep's character clouded my judgment of what was in front of me.
