Reflection Paper

Presentations are an essential part of academic and professional life. They allow individuals to showcase their ideas, share their research, and engage with their audience. Presentations come in various formats, such as group presentations, individual presentations, and poster presentations. Regardless of the type of presentation, the goal is to deliver the message in a clear and concise manner that the audience can understand. It was a pleasure to listen to my classmates' presentations. Several issues within our society were discussed. Among these are the rise of individualism in western society, COVID's impact on education, and technological advancements. Each one of them captivated me with different perspectives and ideas. After the presentation on individualistic society, I thought about how we can create a more community-oriented society, and after the presentation on COVID, I wondered how our DOE system could improve education in light of COVID's negative effects on children, and after the presentation on phones, The presenter concluded the main solution to phone usage in a healthy manner was, self-control. Their ideas were refreshing to listen to and really ponder about.
