Different Point of View Pearl's View

As they gathered around standing around me and my mother the anger on the townspeople's faces grew to a disgusting frown. I knew this situation was not going to end well. Soon they started shouting and calling me names, one of them even called me a demon child. The odds seemed nowhere in me and my mother's favor there was no way I was going to leave this place with my mother at my side.

Change of Mood

The moment Hester was released from the prison a sense of hope flooded through her body. She felt as if now that her prison time had come to an end the shame of her sin had been lifted off from her. It was a feeling of relief and rest. The Letter was still displayed on her bosom, but she wore it with a sense of pride and no longer with shame. Hester had done her time in the prison and while the A was a permeant symbol, she had left her action in the past forever.
