

Sophia Rodriguez

Mrs. Wright

American Literature

12 January 2024

The Tell-Tale Heart

The Tell-Tale Heart is a story of a narrator who struggles with his conscience that will soon lead him to horror. This narrator knew an old man for constantly being kind hearted. However, the young man found the elders' eye sickening and he described it as the eye of a vulture. This encouraged his conscience to take the old man's life. The narrator suffocates and smothers the man with his own mattress. He then cuts the corpse up and hides the pieces under the floorboard. The beating of his heart was so loud that he believed the old man's heart was still alive. After this, the narrator confesses his murder of the old man to the police. Overall, murder will always come to the light and in the end our own sense of guilt will expose what we've done.