1. Satan has doubts with himself, regrets that he has rebelled, then rages at his outcast.

Which arouses the question in my mind if Satan could go back, would he do it again? But then Satan confirms himself to evil. Satan is also somewhat fearful of God because when Gabriel comes down to earth with other angels, Satan runs back to hell.

When he first sees Adam and Eve, he regrets that he is going to destroy them. He envy's them and their happiness, but he knows he could have loved them. Which makes him somewhat of a sympathetic character (or could be the author trying to make him look like the hero again).

2. Satan once again is more of the main character compared to Adam and Eve. He is a lot stronger than them; he is doing the opposite then what they are, but gets them to do his will instead of Gods.

Satan is a much more relatable character than Adam or Eve because we have no clue what it looks like to be perfect.

1. The reason that rebelled against God was because he was somewhat "jealous" of the son. Satan was the highest of angels but wasn't higher than the son. He became livid at this and rebelled with an army of angels.

Satan was displaced as the highest in heaven after God. It was unfair in his opinion because he saw the Son of God as his equal with no right to rule over him.

2. In my opinion the main character is Satan. The story seems to all revolve around him and in mostly every story, Satan is a part of it. Milton is making it feel like we are supposed to be cheering on Satan to reach his goals.

The main conflict of the whole book is Satan attempting his goal.

1. Classical mythology- Is the collective body and study from the ancient Greeks and Romans. I'm not 100% sure what that exactly is, but maybe some mythology was when they were falling for nine days through chaos before landing in hell.

The whole sequence of the war in Heaven sounds very much like the Iliad. When the messiah showed up to relieve the troops the effect was very similar to the moment when Achilles decided to re-join the battle.
