1. It Doesn't really seem that Mr. Darcy has changed but has come more out of his shell. It does feel as if Elizabeth is growing a little nicer towards him.

Mr. Darcy has not changed, but Elizabeth is now willing to see him in this light. On the other hand, it seems as if Mr. Darcy is making more of an effort now.

2. She feels that there will be no more happiness because of her family's actions. Everything was decent, there wasn't too much embarrassment, but now Lydia could cause their whole world to come crashing down.

Up to now it has remained silly ill- breeding and painfully awkward social encounters. Lydia took things up a notch and launched a full-blown scandal. That brings not just embarrassment, but disgrace both to herself and to her family.

1. I'm not sure exactly, but Mrs. and Mr. Bennet seem to be always arguing and complicating each other in everything. Throughout the novel I haven't noticed one moment where the Bennets seemed to truly love each other. Even though Elizabeth and Mr. Darcy have their differences they are still suited well because their feelings and ways go with each other.
2. It's impossible for them to truly happen inside because they both are going into the marriage for the wrong reasons.

"Their passions were stronger than their virtues."

3. I'm not completely sure but all those marriages seemed to be lost. The true love isn't there and there really isn't any understanding in each of those relationships, it's just straight confusion.

One of the spouses is unaware of the true state of the marriage. Mrs. Bennet can't notice her husband distance from her, Mr. Collins thinks they are both on the same page on every subject, and Lydi has no idea that Wickham never cared for her at all.

1. Mr. darcy and jane had the biggest change throughout the story. Elizabeth was able to see past Mr. Darcys awkwardness and read him better. Mr. darcy was able to overcome his awkwardness and pursued changing himself for the better. Everyone else really stayed the same and didn't have any major changes.

He overcame his pride, she, her prejudice.

2. The Darcy's and the Bingley's have the happily ever after because they married for true love and have relationships that don't conflict each other. The Bennetts and Collins will live in agony the rest of their marriages unless they face their problems like Eliabeth and Mr. Darcy did.
3. The Bennetts in my opinion was to demonstrate laziness and discontentment. Mr. Bennet was lazy and he didn't give any attention or care to the problems of his family. Mrs. Bennet just wanted to marry her daughters into wealth showing her discontentment in her own state. The Darcys was obviously to demonstrate a pride and a prejudice. The Bingley's was to demonstrate pursuing true love.
