Well, today started off as a regular day. I always try to get up praising God and working my way into his presence. He sometime gives me a mini vision before I get up. This morning I received from he something, but I don't really remember what it was, instead of writing it down I proceeded to go on to what I normally do. I can say though, that as I pray in tongues and pray in my natural language, God is really sharpening my discernment. Its like I have another set of eyes, and truly I am receiving another set of eyes, my spiritual eyes. I believe I've always used my discernment, but it was not this heightened. Like, I sense things and see things from a different perspective. It's God's perspective that I'm seeing from now, which was something I had really been praying hard about. I told someone today, that last year a well-known prophet has prophesied that this would be a year of acceleration for the body of Christ. The prophecy is unraveling at an unbelievable rate. I'm seeing this acceleration in my own life as God is taking me from faith to faith from glory to glory. I used to say and continue to still say, that God is awesome, without fully understanding it at the time, whereas now he is showing me his awesomeness. The revelations are coming full on now, with more to come. Things are happening so fast, that I can only write a little bit in this journal at a time, because I'm trying to take in everything but just can't. I'm trying to be led by Holy Spirit as to what to write and tell or what not to write and tell about, also being that I am busy as well during the week with my kids and husband. When the Holy Spirit prompts me to sit down and take a few minutes to share a little of what he is showing me I listen. It's something that I don't do often, being that this is all very new to me, something that I'm slowly working my way into, but God is continuously leading and guiding me along this path. I stumble and bumble, but he is right there to pick me up and continue to teach me what he wants me to know. Last Wednesday, someone spoke about a garden, and how the garden had weeds and other things that related to sin in it, they also mentioned a fence being around this garden. Well, the Lord showed me the very same morning in a dream or vision, I don't know, I'm still trying to sort the difference out between the two, about a garden as well. My garden though was a little different, I was not shown the weeds and things as the other person was shown. The vision or dream proceeded this way, I was taken back to a house I lived in as a child, where in the back yard I saw a big garden the garden had fruit trees, and vegetables as well as other things growing in it. It was beautiful, the thing that really intrigued me about this garden was there was no fence around it and no wild animals trying to get the fruit. God was really protecting these plants and their fruit. The whole garden though, was shrouded in darkness, I was like where is the sun. What puzzled me, was that even in the darkness these beautiful plants were growing and thriving even without the sun. Then I saw that there was going to be a barn built in the corner of the garden, it was started, but later torn down. I began to wonder, what happened to the barn? I never did figure that part out.
