

Session 1: Makeup Assignment for missed Session.

I am glad I was able to join this fantastic course. I watched the recording and was genuinely inspired by Ms. Annie's passion. I have always liked art so this course will be close to my heart. Ms. Annie's journey from Elementary teacher to Endeavor and Doctorate was inspiring and taught me that risk-taking is terrific.

I got familiar with class policies and gentle reminders to use APA citations on my assignment. Participation is critical here as well, like other fantastic endeavor courses. In the agenda for session one, we understood the importance of teaching the arts. It is incredible to see how art is interconnected to different standards. They talked about the syllabus and assignment review. The first question posed to the class for discussion was about the value we see in students learning about and engaging in artistic endeavors. I value arts, and I think it is a fantastic opportunity to express myself and feel good about creating something unique to me. I agree with the comments given by participants that students will enjoy most when given a chance to showcase their creativity.

The second question was the value we see in students learning about and engaging the artistic endeavors. I always valued arts, and as a teacher, I incorporated a project that involved different forms of skills in the culminating project for each unit. I wish I had that opportunity when I studied. I buy supplies for urban Title1 students for the project, so they have to worry only about project details.

I resonated with the gifted and talented section and how testing determines gifted and talented. I don't see it this way, and I think skills are more important than test scores. The slide that showed why teach arts? It is more than ever crucial that students get stress-relieving, engaging, and creative activities in class due to last year's online learning and lack of social interaction. Currently, my students are working on the Black History Month STEM project, and they can present in any art form to express as they would like to.

I classify myself as an artist because I use art as a form of expression, and I use my skill to motivate my students. I saw that in Ms. A's session, so I felt inspired and felt good about myself.

I am looking forward to being the best NASA speaker in live session three.

I am looking forward to learning and growing in this class!
