Martin Luther King fought for equal civil rights and against discrimination against people of color in the states. He wanted a future where people would be judged by their character rather than by the color of their skin. He was a Christian leader who wanted people of color to be able to enjoy the same privileges that white people enjoyed.

He wanted to achieve his dream of racial equality, he wanted to put an end to the injustice, discrimination against the American society of that time. He had a vision that all citizens regardless of race would have equal rights and opportunities, contributing to a more just nation. His struggle was always peaceful, and he desired a future where there would be more tolerance and equality in society.

I would fight for the mistreatment of women, create laws that are more severe against mistreatment whether physical or verbal. Today the laws do not protect women enough so that they can go on with their lives in a safe way. There are several cases where they lose their lives because the laws are not as strict as they should be. In addition to the little tolerance that there is in people, both men and women, since gender violence is not limited to her or him.
